WHAT AN EXPERT SAYS: "For the first time, an over-the-counter product has been shown to penetrate the skin with ingredients that may repair DNA damage—something that traditionally could have been done only by prescription-strength-glycolic or prescription-retinol products such as Retin-A," says James Spencer, professor of clinical dermatology at the Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York City. "It stands to reason that if this serum is used consistently, it will reduce the risk of wrinkles or skin cancer, though long-term studies are needed to prove that this is absolutely the case."
